Listerdale Sans

Four weights, accessible by design

A geometric sans serif in four weights and two optical cuts. Letterforms are drawn for effortless recognition: commonly confused characters take clearly different shapes, spacing runs a little wider than usual, and stroke weight settles gently toward the baseline. The result is a typeface that reads comfortably for everyone, including readers with dyslexia and low vision, without ever announcing that it is trying.

Designed for reading

Most reading difficulty starts with letters that look alike. This family removes the ambiguity at the source, raises the lowercase slightly for easier recognition, then gives every word a little more room to breathe.

1lI

One, lowercase l and capital I each take a different shape - no more guesswork.

quip

The q carries a tail on its descender, so p and q are no longer mirror twins.

WOW

An open, uncrossed w - one less unfamiliar shape to decode.

Lining figures align steadily in tables, and the zero carries a centre dot, so it never reads as O.

bd.

A narrower d adds a cue beyond direction alone; full stops and commas are enlarged so punctuation stays visible.

grounded

Stroke weight settles gently toward the baseline, anchoring each letter without drawing attention.

Letter spacing runs 2.4% of an em wider than usual and word spacing 27% wider - a deliberate, gentle widening that never looks spaced out.

Clear letters carry clear thinking

Set generously, read comfortably, forget the typeface entirely

A typeface succeeds when nobody notices it. Words should arrive as meaning, not as rows of shapes to be decoded. Every decision in this family - the distinct forms, the widened spacing, the quiet weight at the baseline - serves that single purpose: letters that stay out of the way of what they say.

Recommended settings

Body text 11pt or larger with 1.5 line spacing, left-aligned and unjustified.
Avoid all-caps for running text. Light is at its best at large sizes;
Two optical cuts share identical letterforms and widths: Display for headings and sizes above 20pt, the text cut for everything you read.
